“KNOWING What God Wants”

Let's face it: Many who profess to be Christians don't really understand much about their faith. Oh sure...they own a Bible, but they rarely look inside, and all they know about it is what they've been told by the preacher.

I've been misdirected by so many people I respected in my life, I just like to (whenever possible) do my own research and draw my own conclusions. After ten years, I'm still kinda aggravated about that electric razor I bought based upon the recommendation of someone I respected on the radio. After that, I didn't believe his news analysis anymore either.

observational analysis thrown in along the way.

My goal in writing the online BibleTrack commentary (www.bibletrack.org) is to attempt to make Bible study fun and exciting for folks. I'm convinced that when Christians embrace the concepts found in God's Word, they become better equipped to handle the problems that life throws their way without falling off the horse (so to speak).

On the other hand, there's nothing wrong with taking some direction in one's study of scripture; that's just sound research practice. As a matter of fact, I consult numerous sources each morning as I add to my own online commentary of the scripture. It seems prudent to tap into the wealth of accumulated knowledge on scripture already in print in order to make certain that all relevant information is considered as one studies a passage of scripture.

“Victorious Christian living isn't a hobby or a pastime; it's a life commitment... a way of life.”

Many from around the world subscribe to the notes I send out by email each morning on the daily reading. It reminds them to read daily and gives them a handy guide for doing so. If you'd like to sign up for the daily email, go to the BibleTrack home page and provide your email address.

As for my own efforts, my goal is to provide Bible students with a quick-start guide in their study. I try to be objective and not too wordy...and only make statements that contribute to understanding the passage...except for a little humor and the Bible. Everyone understands that physical health depends on some basic daily practices which contribute to such—same with one’s spiritual life. People who don’t brush their teeth or bathe regularly don’t make good travel companions...at least for most of us. Praying, fellowshiping with other Christians and sharing one’s faith are all important ingredients for one’s spiritual health, but the centerpiece is spending time daily in God’s Word. That’s how we learn about the very character of God.

I was a 1950’s child. Times were different then—the “children-should-be-seen-and-not-heard” era. None of us kids even knew we had any rights back then. As such, children spent more time understanding the mindset of their parents—gotta please the parents if you wanted any semblance of a quality life. I knew what my Dad liked, and I knew what he didn’t like; I was a student of my Dad’s preferences and demands. Back then, people seemed to be more conscious about what made God happy as well. It seems different now. It’s as though a whole generation is saying to God, “Here’s the way I live my life; deal with it!”

However, for those who really want a relationship with God, understanding the nature of God is still the key, and that information is plainly written in the Bible.

I wish everyone loved it like I do. My goal in life is to introduce Christians to the joy of studying God’s Word daily. Oh...I’m not looking to develop a bunch of know-it-all Bible scholars; I just want to see people equipped with scriptural procedures for dealing with life’s problems—equipped with the knowledge of what pleases their Heavenly Father.

Reading God’s Word daily...you gotta love it!
